The socialization of a corporation / large company must be done in a way that maintains the integrity of the company and its functioning, making a corporation, which in this text, is in the sense of transactional, working on a self-management model, requires a tremendous work and effort to adopt it.
One of the steps towards socialization, would be to make (or replace) the executives by a self-management council, where there are as many executives as workers, where the workers are trained to participate in the self-management council. same system for all branches around the world, with the central self-management council, there is always a council in parallel to make the central council and other councils transparent, and there may be a digitalisation of self-management.
In the self-management model, a model of planned self-management can be adopted, if the company is very large and is unable to be totally self-managed, in a planned self-management, planning is used as a way organizing self-management.
With the self-management councils, there would be the presence of unions within the corporation (transnational cooperative), where unions could rather participate in the production of things of the company and even contribute to various projects or ideas within the cooperative, although there may be a factory of ideas and planning within the cooperative, in order to further innovate the cooperative (corporation).
